

To Whom It May Concern,

[REDACTED] and I am writing this letter of recommendation on behalf of this RN, whom I have worked with since 2005 when she graduated with a Bachelors from [REDACTED] School of Nursing. I have had the privilege of supervising this RN at [REDACTED] Hospital, where we work as clinical nurses in the Neuroscience Intensive Care Unit. This RN has demonstrated a passion for patient care, and her incredible work ethic makes her an ideal employee for any organization.

From her first day on the job, this RN has shown a willingness to learn and grow as part of our professional team. She came as a new graduate with no clinical experience. She was eager to learn and respond positively in emergency situations. She constantly looks for ways to improve patient care and earned her CCRN, CNRN, CSCRN certifications as soon as she was qualified. This RN is always on time and goes above and beyond to help our team perform at its best.

This RN often volunteers to mentor new-graduate nurses and resident student nurses. When our unit needs a nurse to present a unit specific topic at Unit Practice Council (UPC), collaborate with device representatives, or assist in educating patient groups, she is always willing to participate. She is currently a candidate for UPC Co-Chairperson for 2025-26. This RN eagerly participates in Hospital Practice Council on a monthly basis. She has also volunteered to be on the Magnet Committee that her hospital is newly starting.

Team members describe this RN as driven, collaborative, and creative as she constantly strives to develop evidence-based strategies through her delivery in practice. She was been able to efficiently learn and utilize new technologies. Some examples are the use of Codman and Integra EVD systems, IIRRA Flow drains, Pupilometer, and NxStage CRRT equipment. She always brings a positive attitude to work and finds every opportunity to optimize patient and staff wellness. She is punctual and gives thorough SBAR reports. This RN's name is frequently mentioned in conversation for her innovation and selflessness to participate in unit initiatives.

This RN would make an incredible addition to all advance nursing practice teams. Her clinical expertise and impeccable attitude make working with she enjoyable and productive. It is with great honor that I recommend her for the Excellence in Clinical Patient Care award.

Feel free to reach out with any additional questions. I would be happy to further discuss this RN's clinical abilities and her team-oriented approach. I look forward to hearing from you.

Best regards,
